Spike and Tyke

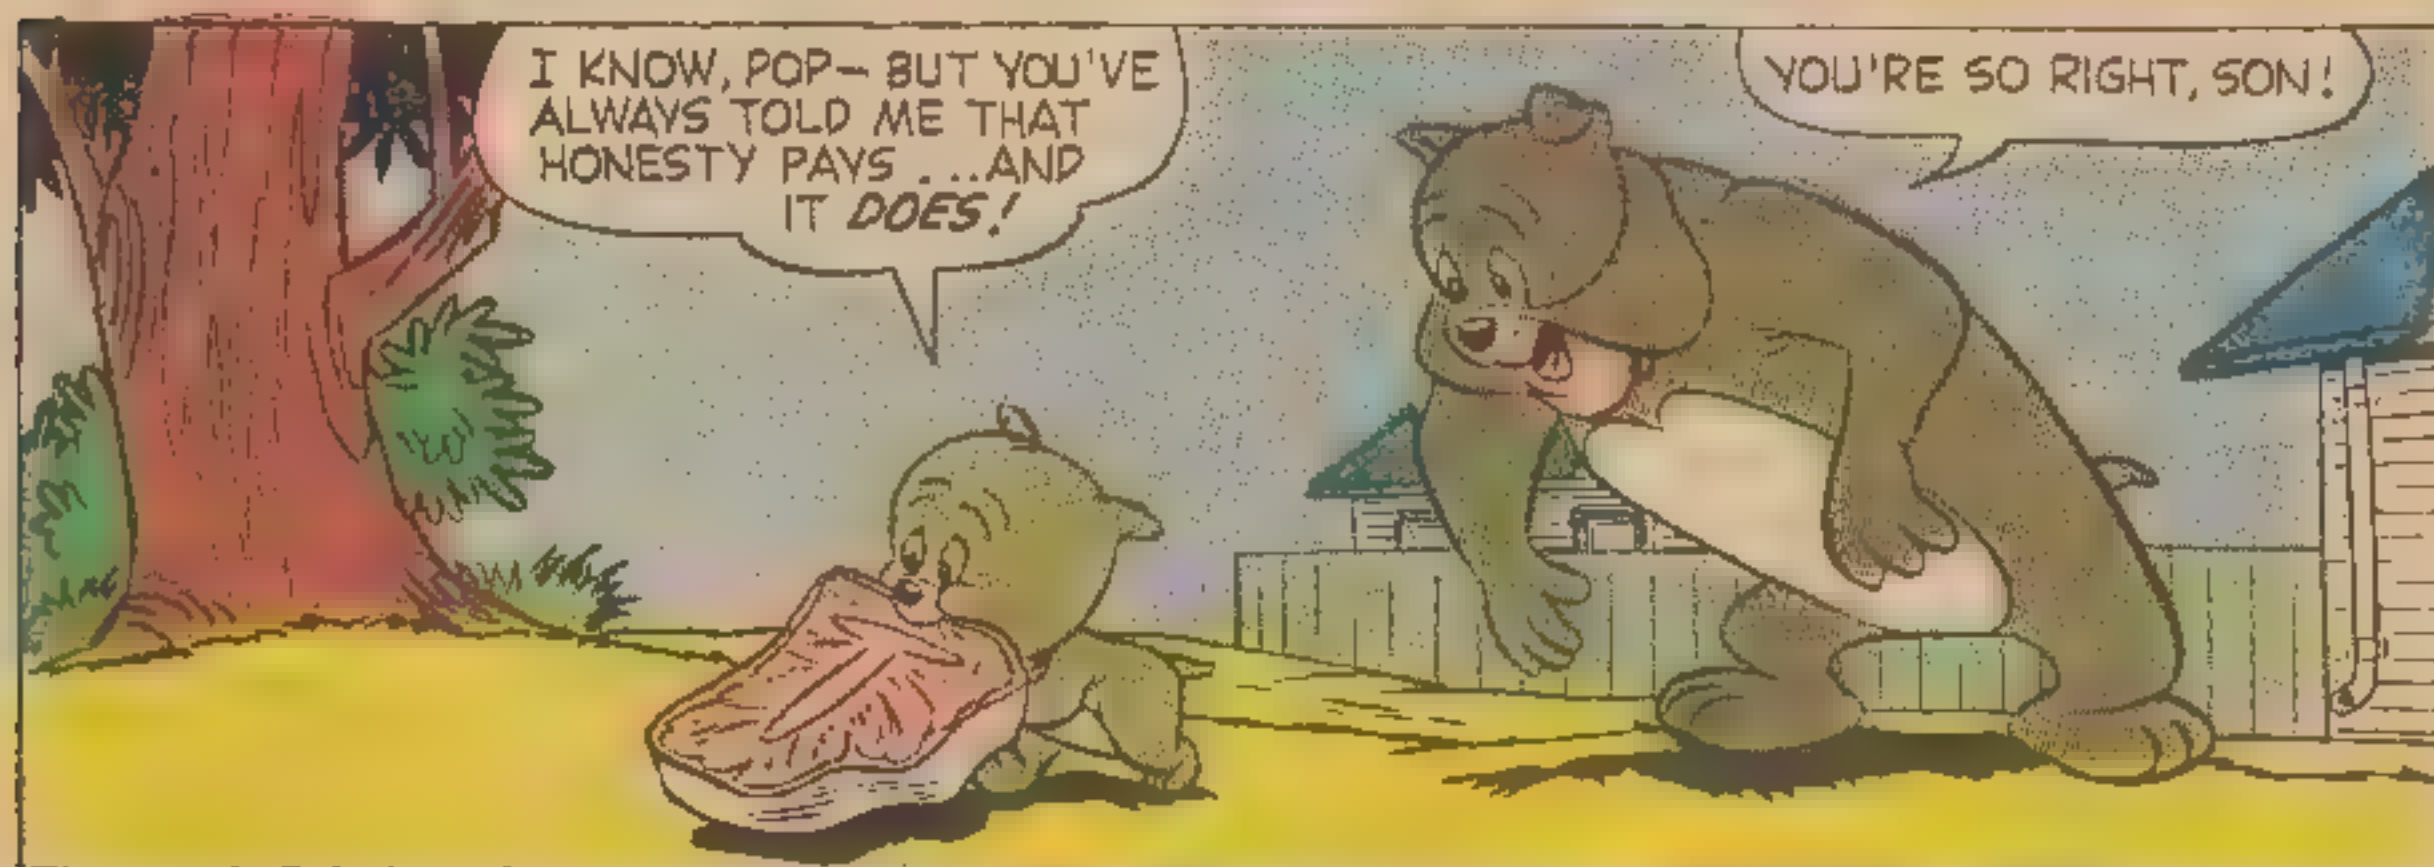

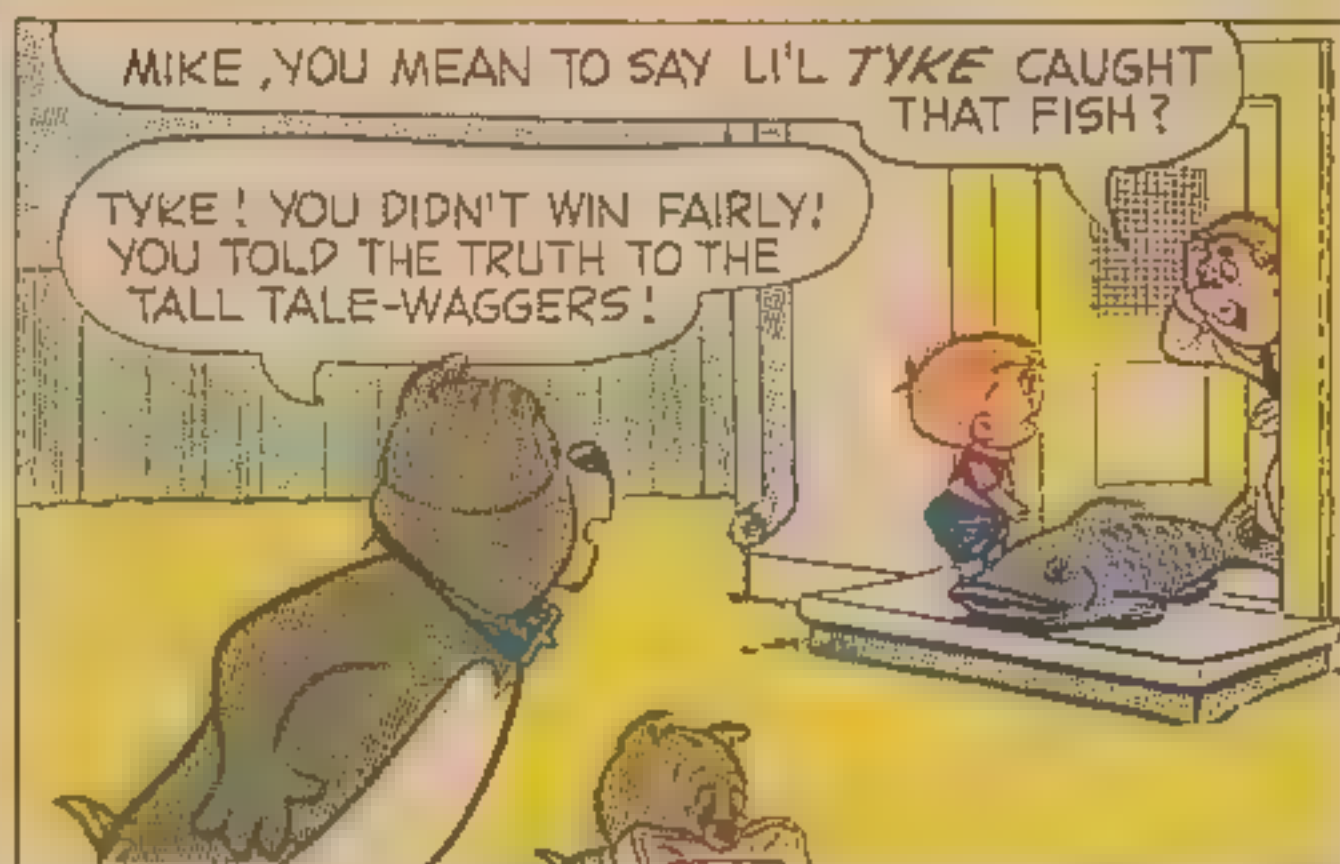

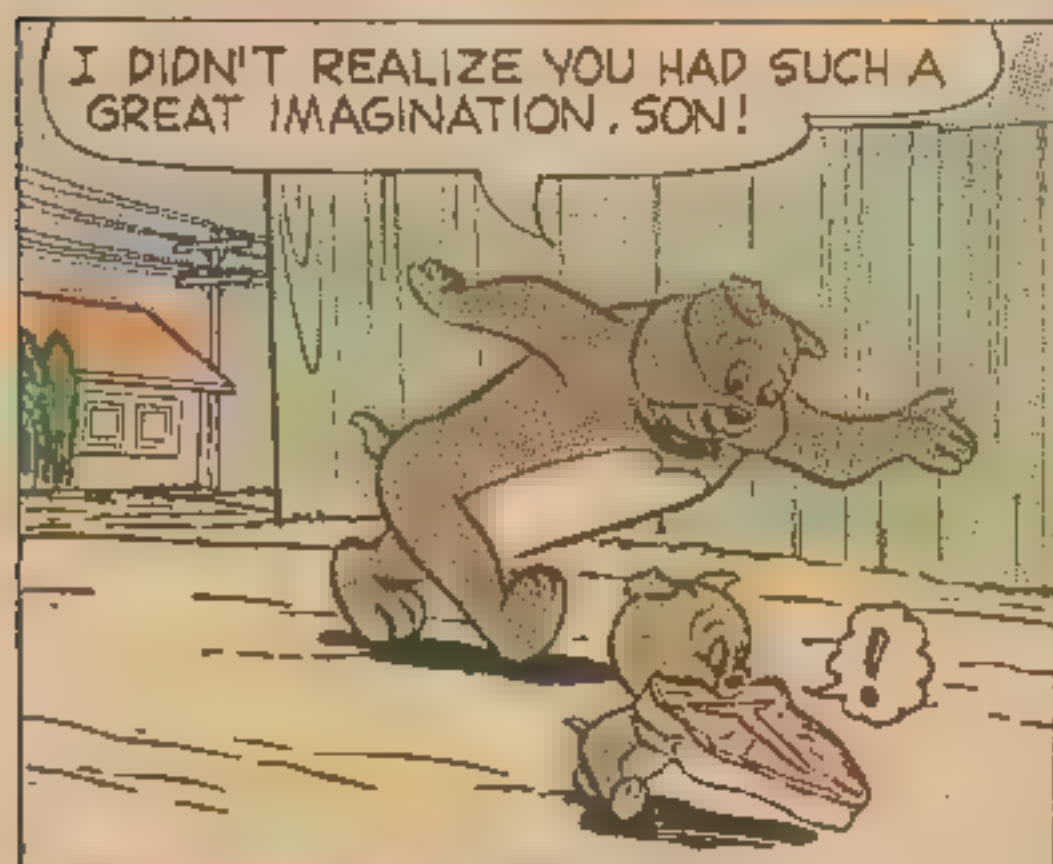

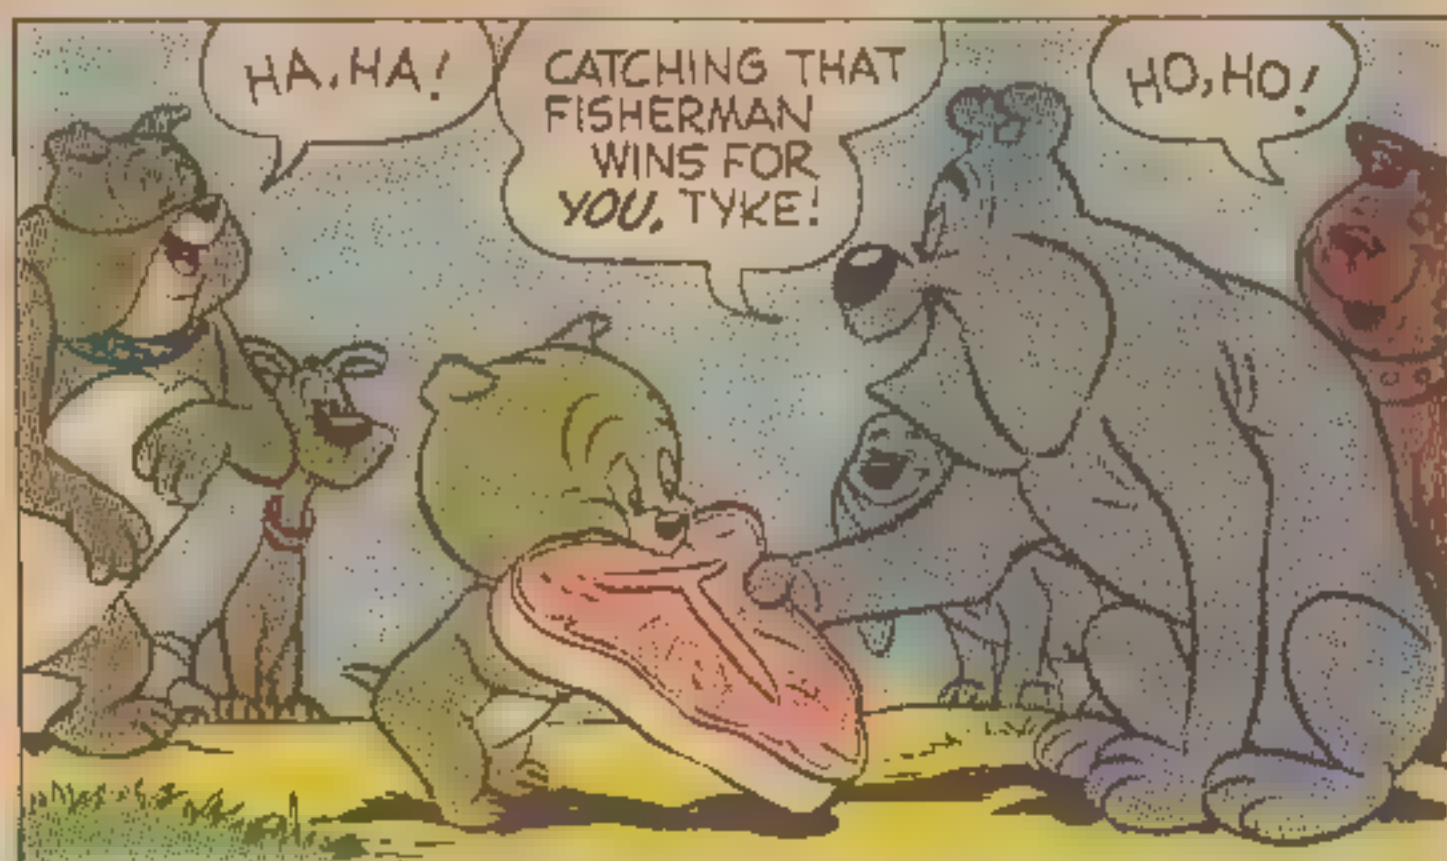

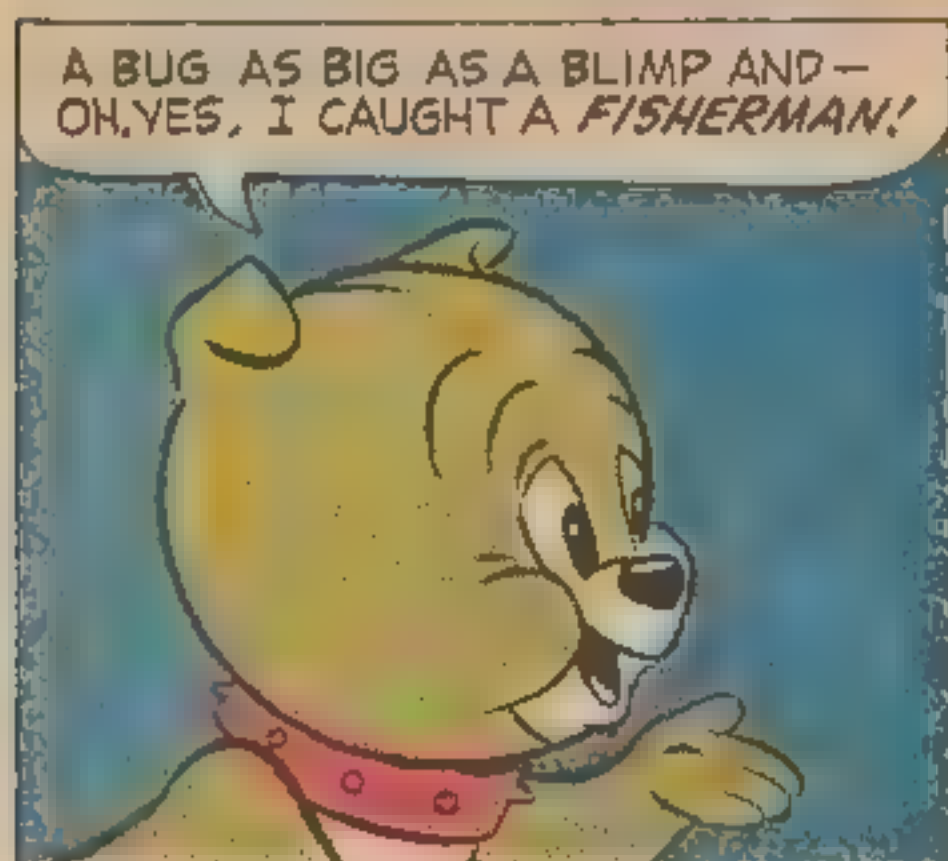

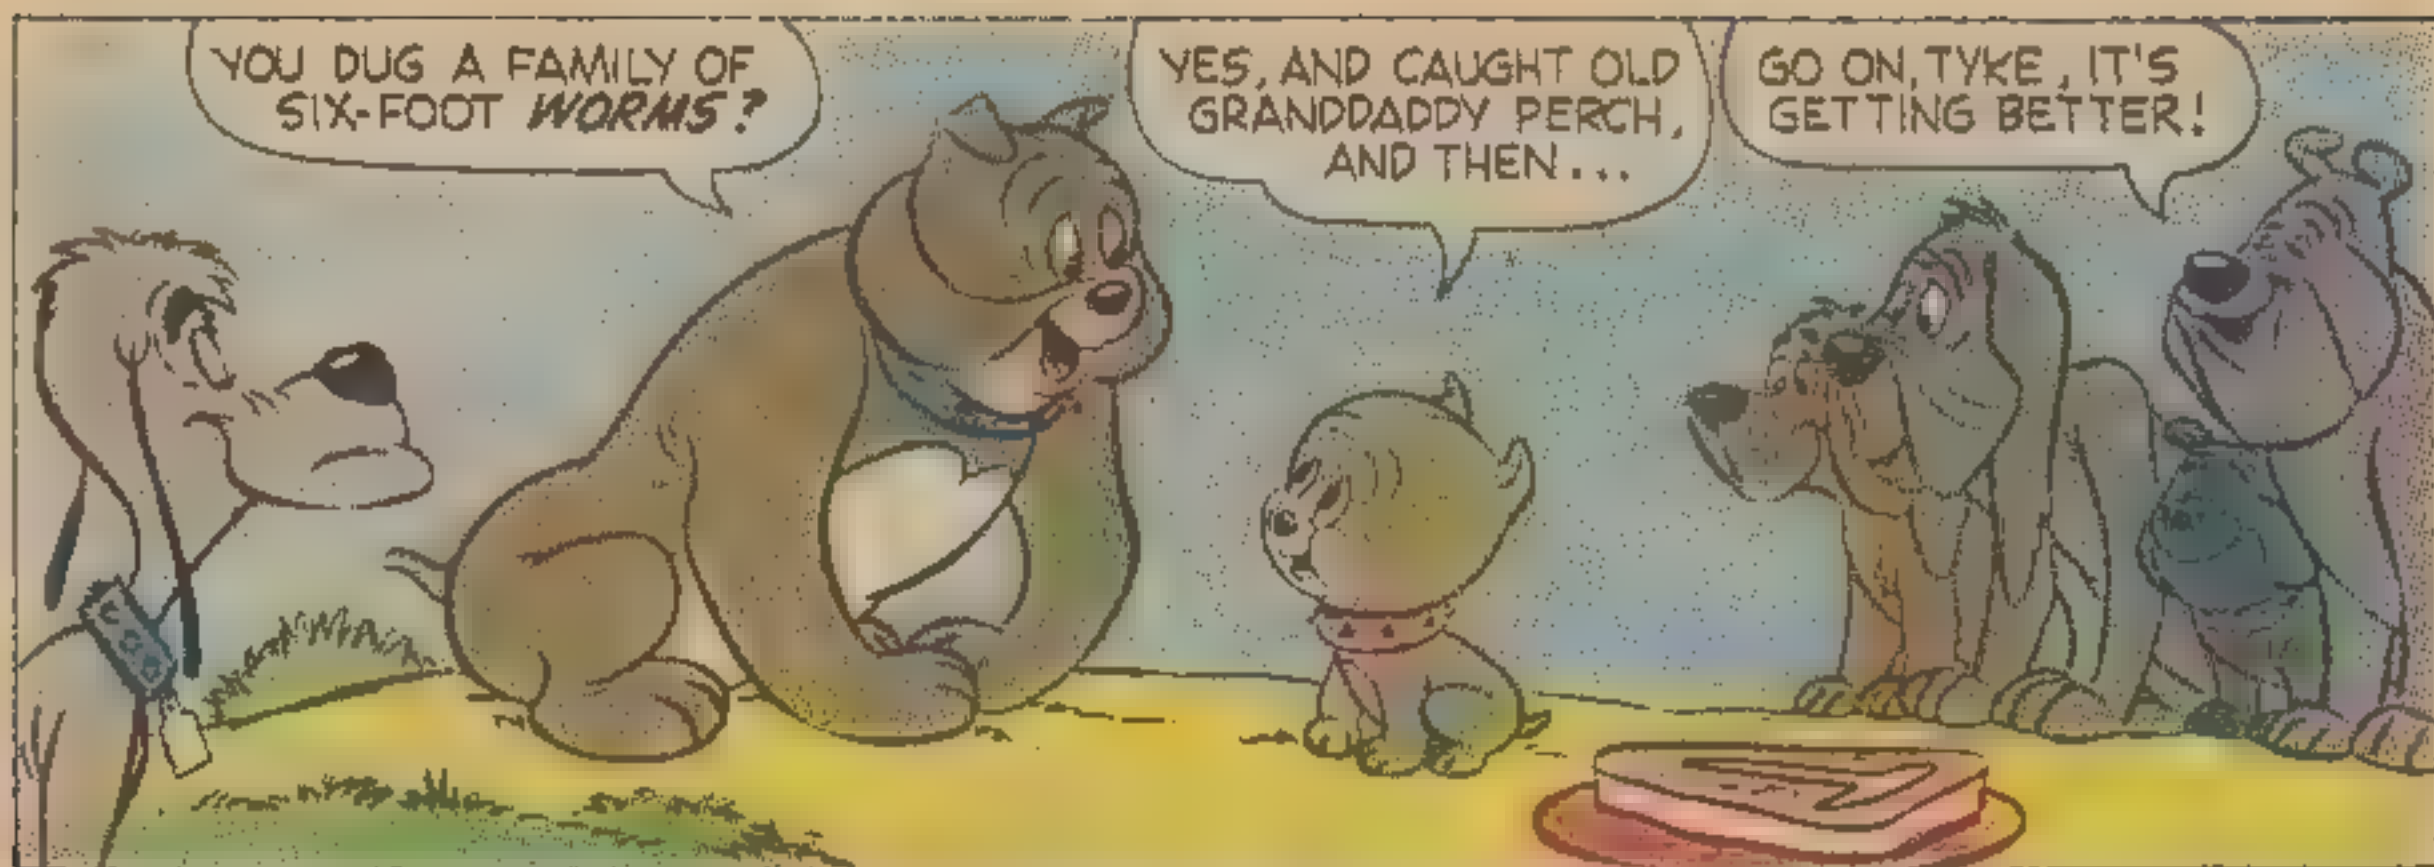

TALL TALE WAGGER

Bertie Bird turned to Billie and shook his head. "Shucks, Billie, the clock in the town tower is wrong again! Guess we just can't depend on it for the right time any more."

Billie looked sadly at the clock. "I wish I knew how to fix it, but I don't. What was that?" The startled Billie spun around.

Then he heard the same noise again. A voice was saying, "Boo-hoo, (hiccup) boo-hoo!"

"What in the world is that strange and dreadful sound?" Bertie asked, his eyes growing wide.

"Boo-hoo, (hiccup) boo-hoo!"

"There's that noise again. I do believe it's coming from over by that big green drew-drew tree," Billie called. "Come on, let's go take a look."

When they reached the big green drew-drew tree, Billie pulled back one of the branches. "Why, it's a bird, just a little bird!" Billie said softly.

"Hello there, my fine-feathered friend," Bertie called out. "Just who are you and why are you making that strange and dreadful sound?"

"I am the cuckoo bird," the unhappy little fellow said between sobs. "The sound I am making is hiccuping, and I always hiccup when I cry, and I always cry when I am unhappy, and I'm always unhappy when nobody wants me around."

"Nobody wants you around?" Billie asked in disbelief. "But what do you mean?"

"It's sad to say, but true," the cuckoo bird whimpered as he dabbed at his eyes with a green drew-drew leaf, "and I just can't seem to do anything right."

"You see," he continued, "I've tried to do any number of things. Once I tried sorting feathers—but I got the brown feathers mixed up with the down feathers, and I got the goose feathers mixed up with the loose feathers, and I got the blue feathers mixed up with the new feathers. As you can guess, I really made a mess of it!"

The cuckoo bird wiped his eyes. "Then I tried counting sheep, but here, too, I failed because, alas, I kept falling asleep," he sighed dejectedly. "You can see, that's the story of my life—one failure after another."

The cuckoo bird began to blubber again.

"Please don't cry," Billie pleaded. "I just can't stand to see a bird unhappy or crying or hiccuping. Bertie," he said, "isn't there some way we can help the cuckoo bird?"

Bertie thought for a moment, then he brightened. "Of course there is! What do you think of this?" He bent over and whispered to Billie.

Billie nodded and smiled as they turned to their forlorn companion. "Mr. Cuckoo," Billie said, "I believe we can solve your problem. Our advice to you is to start doing what comes naturally."

"Why, of course. You're right," Mr. Cuckoo beamed happily. Then a puzzled look swept over his face. "B-But what is th-that?"

"Come with us," Bertie chirped. "We'll show you."

Now, thanks to little Mr. Cuckoo-bird, our two friends always know the correct time. Not only that, but Bertie and Billie can say with pride that theirs is the only town tower with a real live cuckoo clock!
